PORTFOLIO REVIEW

The portfolio returned -10.8% for the month while the Small Ordinaries Accumulation Index returned -13.1% for the month, putting the portfolio return 2.3% ahead of the index return. July proved to be difficult for equity markets globally with the sell-off exacerbated in the small and microcap end of the market. Our portfolio fared reasonably well, given our tilt towards the microcap end of the market. Relative to some funds, our performance was respectable compared to some funds which were down over 30% for the month. The market was dominated again by inflation fears and the associated worry about a hard landing; however, we believe that this will be tempered somewhat by preventative measure from central banks globally. There has also been some tax loss selling in the smaller end of the market. Resource companies were also sold off, though many will still report very strong cashflows providing them the ability to return capital to shareholders over time. We did reduce our positions in some coal companies after the changes to royalty payments announced by the Queensland Government.

As we enter July, some of our positions have recovered from what was an oversold position in June, which is pleasing to see.

In terms of outlook, there is exceptional value at the smaller end of the market. We have been acquiring a position that is yielding over 11% on dividend and we have seen many of the growth companies that have little or no earning, trading at much more sensible valuation levels. We continue to believe that companies that can deliver EPS growth in the current environment will over time have that growth reflected in their share price.
