PORTFOLIO REVIEW

The Glennon Small Companies portfolio returned 2.24% in February, ahead of its benchmark (S&P/ASX Small Ordinaries Accumulation Index), which returned 1.72%. At month end, approximately 14.70% of the portfolio was held in cash or cash equivalents.

The main contributors to performance were Lovisa (+40.92%), Zip (+27.12%) and Superloop (+46.81%).

Lovisa released their results during the month which were well received by the market. The company is trading well and the store rollout is continuing, with the company also noting that they had closed some less profitable stores as part of their portfolio management. Superloop was the subject of an unsolicited bid from Aussie Broadband and the shares rallied off the back of that. The proposal was rejected by the Superloop Board who stated that the bid undervalued the company.

The main detractors from performance were WT Financial Group (-13.33%), Helia Group (-16.06%) and Humm Group (-24.34%).

WT Financial is trading well however is suffering from a lack of buyers in the nanocap segment of the market. We are still optimistic about the consolidation occurring in the wealth management space along with the ongoing dynamics of reducing numbers of advisers in the industry and the opportunities that present for existing advisers to grow their revenue. We expect that there will be further consolidation of the remaining listed players in the wealth management space. We were happy with the Helia results however there was some concern in the market about the low claims rates experienced. We put that down to there being less risk in their book as older policies now have less risk of a claim being made because of the significant increase in property prices over the past few years. After a significant amount of optimism in the share price, Humm Group retracted post the release of their results after a larger than expected credit impairment charge was booked in the accounts. We have subsequently exited our position.
