President Donald Trump's inauguration and first week in the White House has seen some of the markets worst fears on tariffs dialled back, particularly as it relates to China. The US will likely need China's help and co-operation on a range of issues, which opens the door to a more constructive, considered response on imposing tariffs. We anticipate China/Hong Kong equities to perform strongly this year, where the Fund has overweight exposure. Commodities could also do better, particularly copper, should the pending tariffs on China be less punitive.
