Monash IVF confirms incident at its Brisbane clinic, undertaking independent investigation

Monash IVF Group Limited (ASX: MVF, the “Company” or “Monash IVF”) refers to a media report released by the Herald Sun today and confirms that an incident has occurred at its Brisbane clinic, where the embryo of one patient was incorrectly transferred to another patient resulting in the birth of a child.

Monash IVF's focus is on supporting our patients through this extremely distressing time. Monash IVF has informed the affected patients and is continuing to support them.

Since becoming aware of the incident in February 2025, Monash IVF undertook an initial investigation into the incident and has found that it was the result of human error. To support this work, and to identify any further safeguards that may be recommended, Monash IVF commissioned Fiona McLeod AO SC to conduct an independent investigation into the incident. Monash IVF is committed to implementing all recommendations from this independent investigation.

Monash IVF has also disclosed the incident to the relevant assisted reproductive technology (ART) regulators, including the Reproductive Technology Accreditation Committee and voluntarily reported the incident to the new Queensland ART regulator.

Monash IVF conducts regular compliance audits across its sites so that risks are identified and mitigated and adheres to strict laboratory safety measures (including multi-step identification processes) to safeguard and protect the embryos in its care.

Monash IVF has notified its insurers and does not currently consider the incident as material to FY2025 financial performance and will keep the ASX informed of any developments, if necessary.

Monash IVF has distributed a press release, which can be accessed in the Investor Centre section of the Monash IVF Group website.
